Who the Heck is Farallon?

My name is Claudia Tietze, and I am the Founder and Managing Director of a boutique OSINT shop, Farallon, LLC. We are located in the beautiful Pacific Northwest, but work globally to provide OSINT services, consulting and training to individuals, companies and organizations.

I've been described as part spy, part librarian and part technologist, with a dash of digital sniper. What all that puffery really means is this – at my core I am a puzzle solver and find creative ways to solve problems to answer key questions.

Most of my life I was doing OSINT without knowing it had a name – applying OSINT techniques and skills to personal and professional benefit. When I began my OSINT career, I found myself in a team of deeply seasoned and experienced investigators when some of my work was submitted to five international government investigations; exposing evidence of a high profile bitcoin money laundering and embezzlement scheme. The quality of the people I met through this group, with decades of experience in law enforcement and intelligence under their belts – and their generous mentorship throughout my career – meant I had training and guidance heads and tails above others who start out in the field. I was able to cut my teeth on high profile cases that often skirted geopolitics and news cycles. I am fortunate enough to know I have been trained by the best of the best. Because I benefited so profoundly from this support, in addition to my bread and butter work, I mentor young investigators and researchers, support good-works projects and academics.

This ~~Ultimate~~ OSINT Compendium is a way for me to give back to the talented and generous OSINT community that I am so proud to be a part of. I know how fortunate I am and this is part of my commitment to pay it forward – not just to up and comers, but also to my peers at all levels.

About the OSINT Compendium

OSINT – Open Source Intelligence – is defined by its sources – legal, open, public and commercial. It is vibrant, adaptable and has no set rules as to what tools a practitioner “should use” to uncover intelligence, organize it and make sense of it. OSINT practitioners have a wide variety of choices of built-for-purpose tools with a heavy focus on collection. We customize the tools we use on a case by case basis – sometimes creating our own.

OSINT practitioners can be seen as a type of knowledge worker – melding logic, analytics and art. We answer questions and solve puzzles, then communicate in a way people can understand so they can make more informed decisions or integrate our findings with other knowledge. We Red Team/Blue Team exercises and participate in war gaming scenarios.

The tools we use should never circumvent the human aspect of investigation and analysis. Our tools should make finding threads to pull easier and faster, and supplement our hard won gum-shoeing work. But we still need to invest a great deal of personal capital to uncover the nuggets of knowledge we seek to turn into intelligence through the process of analysis.

The OSINT Compendium is not intended to list every tool I’ve ever used or come across. It’s intended to be a highly curated resource of high quality tools that are free – or partially free – that can augment your current tools or introduce you to new sets of tools you have not yet tried. In an effort to make this resource as accessible as possible to practitioners at all levels, I left out the awesome scripts created by the Yoda Masters of OSINT that power so much of our work. I included Custom Google Search Engines. These are familiar Google search boxes that search only curated sources specific to a topic and return results in particular ways. They will be referred to as CSE (Custom Search Engine).

Have a favorite tool you’d like to submit? Hit me up!

Want to hire Farallon, LLC for your personal or business needs? Visit <https://farallon.io> or connect with me on LinkedIn.

Usual caveats: Don’t do illegal things. Farallon, LLC nor myself are responsible for stupid things you do with these tools. Be ethical and respectful. It’s worth it.

People

The greatest secrets are always hidden in the most unlikely places.

-Roald Dahl

Nothing is murkier than investigating people. It's the place where our own biases and laziness can creep in easiest. While this is true for all investigations, it's especially true when investigating people online where the data is most likely to be erroneous either from the sources or self-reported biographies. You need to keep a clear head and set aside your biases, hopes, wishes and dreams for certain outcomes. Often people-focused databases contain false or outdated information – this is true of free, commercial and law enforcement databases. Finding the same factoid across “people finders” doesn't mean it is accurate. These sites are aggregators and should always be considered as POTENTIAL truths.

In a nutshell, vet everything – confirm with as many separate sources as you can. Collect as many official documents as possible.

People Finders

People finders are databases that have biographical details about an individual, including potential family members, associates, contact details, education, work history, assets and criminal records. Most free and paid tools pull data from data brokers, public records and self-reported biographies on Facebook and LinkedIn. Once an inaccuracy creeps in, it will replicate across multiple people searches. Sometimes people's names get mixed up in odd ways or multiple half-filled and orphan profiles can exist. This can lead to a high degree of inaccuracy or outdated information. This is true of free, paid and government databases. ALWAYS CONFIRM YOUR INFORMATION using official documents and records.

Using these biographical databases can be extremely powerful. Think of people finders as a springboard to more exploration!

RipOff Report	A site where people complain about other people and companies and report scams and fraud. It's a clue finder to lead you to other sources.	https://www.ripoffreport.com/

Social Media

Social media posts can be an excellent source, particularly for timed context – stating definitively that someone posted xyz on a given day, but self-reported biographies, such as profile information, still needs vetting – even on sites considered more reputable like LinkedIn. These are generalist sources, but you can find specific resources per platform in the Holy Moly! There's More? section.

Military and Veteran

Due to privacy laws, acquiring military and veteran records can be tricky. Below you will find multiple resources as well as specialized searches and databases. Often you can verify military service without acquiring official records through news, promotions and congressional records. If you require official records, you can file an FOIA request.

Companies

Unequivocally, this proves not only have cats taken over the internet but now the offshore tax haven market too!

– Chris Kubecka – Down the Rabbit Hole: An OSINT Journey Open Source Intelligence Gathering for Penetration Testing

Often when we look into companies, our investigations bloom. We begin to find companies and affiliates of companies and companies of the people involved in the target original company. It can get complex really fast.

While there is a section for international registries, some Corporate Searches are global and give links to the foreign registries so you can pick up the incorporation documents.

The sources in this section will give you tools to begin unraveling corporate structures; and others to visualize, track and communicate the complexity. These visualization tools can be used for other investigative avenues as well, but it seemed most fitting to set them into this section.

Corporate Searches

These resources allow you to gain deep insight into companies and corporate structures. You should pull as many official records and filings that you can in your investigation.

Maintaining Sanity

"Begin at the beginning," the King said, very gravely, "and go on till you come to the end: then stop". – The King of Hearts - Alice in Wonderland

One thing all good OSINT practitioners have in common is an insatiable curiosity. We want to unravel the hidden threads that form a complete picture. We want to understand the nature of things. This doggedness can lead us to very dark places. We often don't see the best of humanity. No matter how seasoned, it affects us. It pulls at our psyches and bleeds into the rest of our lives, even when we are good at compartmentalizing.

Excellent OSINT practitioners know – you must take time to feed your soul. These don't need to be big grand events. Little things done consistently have a deep impact. They can be the difference between depression and anxiety, joy and balance.

Places

Sometimes the questions are complicated and the answers are simple.

Places lists geographic intelligence (GEOINT) sources. Everything from geolocation tools, maps and information on multiple locations to the little helpers that make things tick along a little more smoothly.

As of this writing there is some ironing-out left to do regarding access and use of real-time satellite imagery. To comply with sanctions abuses, companies are requiring more information for compliance with accounts. If a link isn't working, be patient and try again later. It may just be temporary. If you don't need real-time satellite imagery, archives of older and recent imagery are still freely available, although they may have restrictions on public postings.

Geolocation

Tools to geolocate places of interest. This skill can take many forms and in addition to these tools, there are others that can help with analysis in the Little Helpers section.

Geography and Places

It's not enough just to find a place on a map. Often, understanding the "sense" of a place is as important in order to understand its significance. Many of these tools can also help with the proper names of places when you established coordinates of interest, but need to establish if those coordinates are significant. For example – was an act of sabotage likely sabotage or just faulty wiring? To answer this, knowing what, exactly, exists at that location is important.
